Answer 1

Food is not only the major contribution of economic problem, though it's a main contributor. If we could be able to produce all the foods we needed in our backyard, then economic problems could be reduced easily. Raw foods needs to be processed before consumption thus we need energy supply. Other factors that would still contribute to the economic problems may include transportation as well as other services.

Answer 2

Despite been versatile- able to do everyone else job, division of labor is still quite vital in the society so as to ensure professionalism and the production of a high quality job. Besides, the workload would be very tiresome thus wear out the versatile-able individual.

Answer 5

Answer 8

Wants and needs are artificially imbalanced and protracted by an offering protection as well as advertisement to boost sales to say a mass prolongation of industrial revolution. This simply implies that scarcity will simply continue existing.
